

Offering a FREE 2.5 hour gentle sharing on reducing carbon in your life for your interfaith group or your religious community

People of faith across the world are invited to join a global climate initiative Living the Change- in a challenging climate
\(<https://livingthechange.net>\).

Collectively, our choices matter. So, committing to our own personal steps towards more sustainable lifestyles makes us part of the solution- as well as encouraging others in our community to also take action in their lives.

Climate Change research on reducing carbon in our lives has shown that this is achieved through group support and making a commitment to reduce carbon in the 3 priority areas of food, transport and energy.

Food:
 Current research shows that eating a more plant-based diet and less meat is more efficient use of land and water, and far better for environment, climate and our health.

Energy:
 Being more efficient with our electricity use and switching to renewable energy wherever possible, we can make a major reduction in our greenhouse emissions.

Transport:
 Reducing our use of fossil fuels (petrol and diesel in air and road transport) can help to cut air pollution and greenhouse gas emissions.

CONTACT: Sue Ennis at wcrpaust@iinet.net.au if you would like a 2.5 hour session for your interfaith group or faith community

Australian Religious Response to Climate Change <https://arrcc.org.au>, United Religious Initiatives, <https://uri.org/> Religions for Peace Australia <https://religionsforpeaceaustralia.org.au/> have partnered to run these sessions.